

Uke' Contracting System

Two entities exist,
And come together to make something.

They agree that it belongs to one entity,
Who owns it fully.

The owner may share parts with others,
Within limited cycles and terms they define.

To anyone,
As many times as they want.

About

The Uke' Contracting System is a packaged Joint Authorship Agreement, Copyright Assignment, and Copyright Licensing Agreement to assist those involved in interviews or media co-creation to ensure that the rights to the content fully belong to the knowledge owner and that the material is licensed in a relational way. The Uke' Contracting System reimagines how storytelling and information gathering can be made immediately equitable. The system provides a utility to define sole ownership of digital content to the knowledge holder at the initial fixation of copyright for sound, video, and image recordings. After the copyright is defined, the owner can then choose to license the work to others for specific and limited uses. These limited licenses requires reevaluation and relicensing with any new use.

Origins

Uke', the Uma word for "water," and a transliterative pun of "ok." It was originally concocted for a collaboration between the Brittany Verdin-Jimenez and Hali Dardar of the Houma Language Project and Claire Anderson of Ripple Effect. Bvlbancha Public Access' Jenna Mae, Ida Aronson, Jean-Luc Pierite, and Hali Dardar refined the system for use within media projects, leading to support from the Mellon Foundation. In 2025 Hali Dardar launched the first public Uke' system during an artists residency at A Studio in the Woods. Kurt Naquin field tested the system within their research with the Cooper Participatory Science Lab. The text of this version of the Uke' Contracting System was created in 2026 in collaboration with Glushko-Samuelson Intellectual Property Clinic at the American University by student attorneys Jacqueline Jedrych and Madeline Stoeri, and with Hali Dardar of Bvlbancha Public Access. The visual metaphor was designed by Hali Dardar within a fellowship from the Indigenous Data Alliance.

Use

The Uke' Contracting System is free and open access through Bvlbancha Public Access under the Creative Commons' Attribution-NonCommercial-ShareAlike 4.0 International License. The Uke' Contracting System contributors believe in promoting accessibility to the legal system, increasing creators' and artists' agency over their intellectual property, and supporting Indigenous data sovereignty. Through the continued iteration of this contract, we hope to further these goals for all.

When should we sign this contract?

Sign this contract before creating the work. For example, right before an interview begins. All parties should understand that they are creating a joint work, and that the copyright will be assigned to and ultimately owned by the Knowledge Holder(s).

Who should sign this contract?

The party requesting collaboration on the work and the party or parties they wish to collaborate with should each sign this contract.

Where should I sign?

For both the collaboration agreement and the licensing agreement, all parties should sign at the end of the contract. Additionally, for the collaboration agreement, all parties should initial at the bottom of every page.

There are many blanks beyond signatures to be completed. For ease of use, all places knowledge holders must complete are indicated by round form fields (example: ).

The document contains plain text descriptions of the legal functions used. These are to help guide the reader in better understanding the policy put forth in the sections. These descriptions are denoted in [brackets].

Can I change the format of this contract?

Yes, this contract will be binding in any format, including Google Forms, as long as all parties understand the contract, intend to enter it, and sign the contract. Signatures can be digital or typed.

Who should have a copy of this document?

The person(s) who own the copyright (the Knowledge Holder(s)) and any licensees need to retain copies. It is best practice for all parties to keep a copy for their records.

What happens to this copyright when I pass?

Copyright is property, so it passes to heirs just like any other asset. It lasts for the author's lifetime plus 70 years. When the copyright owner passes away, ownership goes to whoever inherits their estate. If they have a will, they can name someone to receive their intellectual property specifically. Without a will, the state determines heirs, typically in this order: spouse, children and grandchildren, parents, siblings, and then other blood relatives.

What should I know when using this contract with more than one Knowledge Holder?

There are three things to keep in mind. First, all Knowledge Holders owning the copyright may license rights to other parties, even if the other Knowledge Holders are not aware of the license. Next, all Knowledge Holders must agree on their ownership split in the Collaboration Agreement, and any licensing payments must be divided and distributed accordingly, even if not all Knowledge Holders are aware of a particular licensing agreement. For example, if Knowledge Holder A owns 70% and Knowledge Holder B owns 30%, a $150 payment would be split $105 and $45. Finally, wherever there are clauses labeled "For Multiple Knowledge Holders," those should be included.

What should I know when using this contract with a minor party?

Minors can use the Uke' System. In these situations, the contract should be signed by the minor's legal guardian if possible. If a legal guardian is signing on behalf of their child, they should sign as a party on that party's line (e.g., sign as a Knowledge Holder). Additionally, whether signed by a guardian or not, a minor can cancel the contract at any time before turning 18. If the contract is cancelled, each party must return anything received (such as payment) and the licensee must stop using the work.

What does each side have to contribute?

Each party must contribute material that is independently copyrightable – i.e. content that reflects some level of creativity. Mere ideas or suggestions do not qualify. Copyright law protects the unique way an individual expresses their ideas – the choice of words and techniques a storyteller uses, the creative arrangement of facts in an article or interview.

What types of assets should I use this for?

Use this system for copyrightable assets, such as video interviews, digital documents, and other computer-stored files, on any subject matter. Copyright protects the expression of ideas, not the underlying facts. For example, if a Knowledge Holder says "New Mexico is in the Southwest" in a video interview, they own the copyright in that video, meaning no one can use it without permission. However, they cannot prevent others from stating the same fact elsewhere.

What do these rights mean in practice?

Reproduction - The right to make copies of the work (Examples: Printing a book, downloading a digital image, or copying software).

Derivative Works - The right to create new works based on the original (Examples: Translating a book, turning a novel into a film, or creating a sequel).

Distribution - The right to control how the work is first shared with the public, whether by sale, rental, lease, or lending (Examples: Selling physical books in a store or selling digital files online).

Public Performance - The right to play recorded video or audio in a public space, including online (Examples: Playing a song over the radio or in a restaurant, screening a movie, or performing a play).

Public Display - The right to show a still image of the work in a public space (Examples: Displaying a painting in a gallery, showing a photo on a website, or showing a still from a movie).

Digital Audio Transmission - The right to control digital streaming of a sound recording (Examples: Streaming a song on platforms like Spotify or Apple Music).

How do I determine what rights I can license?

In the licensing agreement, select the rights that apply based on the type of asset. Every asset falls into one of the categories below:

Type of Work	Examples	Rights that May be Licensed
Literary Works	Books, articles, poems, computer programs/software, databases, and website content	Reproduction, derivative works, distribution, public performance, public display
Musical Works	Compositions, including any accompanying words (lyrics)	Reproduction, derivative works, distribution, public performance, public display
Dramatic Works	Plays, operas, and scripts, including accompanying music	Reproduction, derivative works, distribution, public performance, public display
Pantomimes and Choreographic Works	Choreography for dance and pantomime routines	Reproduction, derivative works, distribution, public performance, public display
Pictorial, Graphic, and Sculptural Works	Photographs, paintings, sculptures, maps, logos, technical drawings, and jewelry	Reproduction, derivative works, distribution, public display
Motion Pictures and Audiovisual Works	Feature films, recorded interviews, documentaries, videos, and video games that include both a visual and audio component	Reproduction, derivative works, distribution, public performance, public display
Sound Recordings	The recording of a series of musical, spoken, or other sounds (not the underlying musical composition)	Reproduction, derivative works, distribution, digital audio transmission
Architectural Works	Buildings, architectural plans, and drawings of architectural elements	Reproduction, derivative works, distribution

SECTION II. Assignment.

A. Assignment.

[This clause gives ownership of the entire copyright to the Knowledge Holder(s). It states that the Requestor wants to give up their ownership stake in the copyright and to assign all of it to the Knowledge Holder(s).]

This Copyright Assignment (“the Assignment”) is made on the Effective Date, by and between the Requestor and the Knowledge Holder(s). The Requestor is a joint owner of all right, title, and interests in the Work created by Requestor and Knowledge Holder(s). The Requestor hereby assigns to the Knowledge Holder(s) all of the Requestor’s right, title, and interests throughout the world in the Copyright (and all renewals and extensions), together with the right to recover damages, profits, and all other remedies for past infringements thereof. If the work is to be registered, it will be registered in the name(s) of the Knowledge Holder(s).

For Multiple Knowledge Holders:

[This clause also establishes the proportions of joint ownership if there are multiple Knowledge Holders. Knowledge Holders may choose to give each party an equal ownership stake. Alternatively, multiple Knowledge Holders can set up custom ownership proportions in the Multi-Contributor Signature Chart. The ownership proportions in this Agreement determine the proportion of funds paid to each Knowledge Holder under any licensing agreement.]

This assignment is made [select one] in the proportions specified in Multi-Contributor Signature Chart.

These proportions apply to all rights associated with the Copyright, and any future additions, modifications, or derivatives of them. The Knowledge Holders jointly agree that any income derived from the licensing or other exploitation of the Copyright will be distributed according to the same proportions as ownership.

B. Term.

[This clause states that the assignment lasts forever and cannot be undone.]

This Agreement enters in full force on the Effective Date listed above and continues in perpetuity. The assignment made hereunder is non-revocable.

C. Inheritance.

[This clause states that the copyright is part of the Knowledge Holder’s estate and will be treated like any other property upon their passing.]

Ownership of this Copyright will enter the estate(s) of the Knowledge Holder(s) and, absent any agreement to the contrary, will flow with the rest of the intellectual property in the estate(s).
